
THE NEW OLDSMOBILE

GAINING a GREATER PERCENTAGE of the BUSINESS IN ITS PRICE CLASS THAN ever BEFORE

Growing Popularity

Since the enthusiastic reception given the 1931 Oldsmobile on the occasion of its introduction to the public in January of this year, Oldsmobile's popularity has continued to increase, month after month. As a result, Oldsmobile is now enjoying a greater percentage of the business in its price class than ever before.

Gummy Gasolines do this to your valves

Why Tydol Gasolines Are 99 98/100% Gum-Free

1. SELECTED CRUDES
Crudes selected for their cleanliness are "multi-fractionated" by super-refining equipment costing millions. Each crude gets the exact degree of refining it requires.

2. "GUM-TAPPED"
In towering fractionation stills of the most advanced type, Hi-test TYDOL is refined to gum-free purity. The gum-carrying gasoline is drawn off for re-distillation long before the refining process is completed.

3. GUM-FREE BLENDING
Tide Water's exclusive, secret blend of gum-free gasolines creates the super-power, high-test, anti-knock qualities of Hi-test TYDOL.

"Gum-Tapped"

Refining equipment costing millions creates these pure, sparkling, gum-free gasolines. In this huge, modern, bubble tower, gum-carrying gasolines are removed for re-distillation.

. . but TYDOL Gasolines are 99 98/100% Gum-Free

GUM sticks valves. GUM clogs feed lines. GUM forms hard carbon. GUM distorts piston rings. GUM steals horse-power. GUM is the repair man's best friend.

You will find GUM in improperly or hastily refined gasolines.

But your motor will never be injured by Hi-test TYDOL . . . not in a hundred thousand miles!

For Hi-test TYDOL is 99 98/100% gum-free!

Super-refined by modern equipment costing millions. "Gum-tapped" by Tide Water's own special process.

High-test, as usual. Super-power, certainly. Anti-knock, of course. And not a penny premium to pay. Extra quality, but no extra cost

NASH

Aviation demands Twin-Ignition!

NASH OWNERS CALL IT INDISPENSABLE!

Air Commerce Regulations, issued by the United States Department of Commerce, absolutely require two spark plugs per cylinder on all commercial aircraft motors of over 40 horse power.

Aviation demands perfection in power. And so two spark plugs, twin sparks, are employed in aircraft motors—to burn the gasoline more efficiently—to provide power, speed, safety and economy beyond the reach of single ignition.

For the same reasons, Nash engineers, in Nash Eight-90 and Eight-80 motors, also provide Twin Ignition.

Of course, you can get along without Twin Ignition. But here, in engineering figures, is what you are missing:

The same motor, with Twin Ignition instead of single ignition, produces 22% more power, 5 miles an hour more top speed, and 2 extra miles of travel from every gallon of gasoline.

And, the prices of these Twin-Ignitioned-motored Nash Straight Eights are no higher than the prices of other cars without this important improvement.

Addison Broke Even Over Week-End

Locals Beat Knoxville, Sunday, But Lost to Elkland, Saturday

The Addison ball tossers had to be statisfied with an even break over the week-end. They won from Knoxville handily, but were forced to take the count from Elkland. The scores were Addison 10, Knoxville 6 and Addison 2, Elkland 6. The pitching of "Baldy" Dorn for Elkland was too much for the locals to solve with men on bases and while Addison outhit the visitors, they had to take the short end of the count. Grange started for Addison and while out hit hard was the victim of several lucky hits and unlucky breaks that sent runs across for the visitors. Ripley pitched the last three sessions and held Elkland scoreless. Staff Whitmore, Hewson and Mat Whitmore were in the Addison lineup for the first time this year and all of them performed in fine style. John Grange made a fine catch which he turned into a double with the help of S. Whitmore. S. Whitmore hit safely three times and Laffkas and LaChance twice each. M. Whitmore hit the ball hard, but got but one safe one away. Elkland took the lead in the second and although Addison came within one of tying the count in the fourth, Elkland held the lead throughout.

Addison got away to a flying start by scoring three in the first and duplicating in the second at Knoxville. McDermott working behind this lead was never crowded or forced to extend himself. He had plenty of steam and breezed along easily to his first victory as a pitcher in an Addison uniform. Addison hit three Knoxville pitchers hard and timely. Orr broke into the hit column with a running start with three hits in as many trips to the plate. The Addison infield worked fast and furious. John Grange had a field day at short with ten chances accepted out of eleven. S. Whitmore also had a a busy day. Hewson and Mosher took care of all the chances that came their way. Hewson also doubled twice. One of the outstanding features of the two games was the fine catching and hitting of George LaChance.

Next Sunday, the Addison team invades Blossburg to meet the new comers in the league. Ripley will probaby start for the locals. The scores follow:

UNCLE SAM SAYS

"One year's seeding mak s s ven years' weeding." Weed plants produce from a hundred to several thousand seeds to a plant. Some weeds such as wild carrot, burdock, and sowthistle, may produce 20,000 or more seeds on one plant. Control weeds by preventing the ripening of seed, by preventing the introduction of weed seeds on the farm, and by preventing perennial weeds from making top growth.

Do not add to the cooking water of vegetables until they are nearly done.

Parents should not have family rows at the table if only for the sake of not spoiling a child's appetite for food.

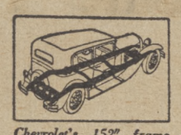
-:- Do You Know? -:-
(Reg. Applied For)

THAT what is believed to be the first public school in North America was held in this tower of an old fort in Montreal where Margaret Bourgeoys, one of the few women of the settlement, organized a class in 1660 and taught without charge the children of the settlers and Indians? The tower is still standing in the heart of down town Montreal.

Matchless economy with six-cylinder smoothness

"Better than 20 miles to the gallon." "Its cost-per-mile is the lowest of any car." "Never have to add oil between crankcase changes." "Drove from Ohio to California on a repair expense of $1.05." "It just runs and runs and runs."

—typical comments from owners of the Chevrolet Six



Chevrolet's 152" frame supports the body throughout its entire length

Why is it that Chevrolet—a big, powerful, smooth-running six—actually costs less to operate and maintain than any other car you can buy? The answer lies in five outstanding factors of Chevrolet economy:

1. Efficient Engine Design makes Chevrolet fuel consumption so low that 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline is nothing unusual for a Chevrolet owner.

2. Modern Chassis Design—as evidenced by Chevrolet's long heavy frame, four parallel-mounted springs, and smooth-running six-cylinder engine—increases the ability of the Chevrolet Six to run dependably, day after day.

3. Excellence of Manufacture also adds to Chevrolet dependability and long life. Chevrolet pistons, for instance, are built so carefully, and held true to such close limits of precision, that many owners have gone 20,000 miles or more without having their motors opened for major servicing.

Chevrolet's pistons are built to close limits of precision

4. High-Quality Materials are used throughout the Chevrolet car—costly nickel steel, chrome-vanadium steels, chrome-nickel steels—to assure trouble-free, low-cost service for tens of thousands of miles.

5. Economical Nationwide Service, with its low flat-rate charges on labor and genuine parts, is available at 10,000 dealers throughout the country, who also offer the protection of the most liberal owner's service policy ever to back a low-priced car.

Chevrolet's Owner's Service Policy is the most liberal ever offered in connection with a low-priced car

Remember—in addition to all these basic economies—Chevrolet offers the extra dollars-and-cents advantage of one of the lowest delivered prices on the market. And this cost may be spread over a period of many months by the liberal G.M.A.C. plan.

TIGER EYE
by B. M. Bower

Tenth Installment

Bob Reeves, the Kid, was nicknamed Tiger Eye by his friends down in the Brazos country because his 'gun-eye" was yellow. When his father, "Killer Reeves," died the Kid left Texas to avoid continuing his father's feuds. Reaching Montana he is forced to draw on Nate Wheeler, an irate nester. In the exchange of shots Wheeler drops dead, the Kid later learning that Bob Garner who had also shot at the same time, really killed Wheeler.

Garner gets the Kid to join the Poole outfit as a rim rider. The Kid succors Wheeler's widow and is interrupted by Pete Gorham and some other nesters. He shoots Gorham through both ears for coupling his name with Wheeler's widow. Later he rescues a girl, Nellie, and her dad from Gorham, wounding Pete again. The girl, in spite of her belief the Kid is an imported Texas killer, warns him the nesters will kill him. The Kid warns Garner the nesters are planning an attack on the Poole outfit. He meets Jess Markel, a Texan who is boss of the Poole wagon crew and shoots him through both hands.

Nellie's dad is shot from ambush and suspects Babe against his wish. The latter thinks another nester killed the old man. Babe is wounded by hidden enemies, who also shoot at Tiger Eye but miss. The Kid pulls Babe back into the cabin and wounds one of the attackers.

Nellie comes to the cabin secretly to aid The Kid and the latter crawls through the roof and makes plans to escape with the wounded Babe at night. He and Nellie wait for darkness outside of the cabin.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"Babe's woke up." The kid lowered the mouth organ from his lips, heaving a big sigh as he wiped it on his sleeve and slid it into his pocket.

He sighed again as he rose, hitched up his gun belt and looked gravely down at her.

"We all could get outa heah easy if it was just us two. But I kain't leave Babe. He's been pow'ful good to me, Babe has—"

"Of course, we can't leave him. They'd kill him sure, and there's been too much killing already. We'll make it somehow. I—you can just do anything, Tiger Eye!"

"Shoah feel like I could, from now awn," said the kid, looking at her with shy meaning, and started to climb. "We'll make it," he called softly down to her. "We've plumb got to make it!"

They did make it. Down the gully, with Babe tied on his horse, insensible to pain or motion. Fifty yards, a hundred, with the rifles on the ridge barking foolishly at the empty cabin.

The sun went down behind the rim, the daylight was merging into dusk when the kid forced the horses up the steep bank

"Say, where do you think you're goin', Tiger Eye?" Babe roused suddenly to consciousness and speech when they stopped beside Nellie's horse, circling the rock anxiously in the starlight.

"Reckon we'll go awn ovah to the Poole, Babe."

"What you goin' to the Poole all of a sudden for?" Babe's voice sharpened. "Think you'll beat me to the bounty? You've got another think comin', Kid. I'll do the collectin' on this one."

"Don't know what yo'all talking about, Babe." The kid glanced uneasily toward Nellie. "I'm totin' yo'all ovah to the Poole, account of that bullet hole in yoh side."

"You're a damned liar!" Babe's voice was abnormally loud and distinct. Nellie, mounting her horse, reined close to listen. "You're goin' to try and gyp me outa my money for old Murray. You can have the pay for gettin' Ed Murray, if you want to be on the grab, but I'll be damned if you're going to collect for the old man!"

"Oh, you—you fiend!" Nellie forced the words out through her clenched teeth. "Paid killers, both of you!"

"Ain't paid yet, but I'm sure as hell goin' to be. Damn' right!" The febrile strength that had upheld Babe for a minute began to ebb. He swayed in the saddle. "Dirty work—and it's money talks, in this neck uh the woods. Damn right I'll be paid! Tiger Eye ain't goin' to get the best—the best of me—he can't—" His head rolled on his chest then, as his body sagged against the ropes that held him in the saddle.

"You killer!" Nellie jumped her horse toward the kid.

She had pulled her quirt from the saddle horn, and she struck him across the face; swift, slashing blows which the kid never felt at all, save in the heart of him. He just stood there in the starlight and held the frightened horse quiet, while the quirt he had given her left its mark on neck and shoulder and cheek.

"And I trusted you like a fool—and thought you were good!" With one final blow her arm fell to her side as if, in despair at ever wreaking vengeance upon him. "Shoot me now, why don't you? I'll turn my back!"

"Yo'all's crazy as Babe." The soft drawl of his voice had a chill. "Yoh brothah was shot befo' I evah came into the country. I nevah did kill a man in my life—but I'm plumb tempted to right now, lessen he's daid a'ready."

"Why? Because he gave you away?" Her voice shook with stubborn rage.

"Yo'all knows bettah than that, Miss Murray. Yo'all knows in yoh own mind I nevah hahmed a livin' soul." He leaned forward, staring up into her face with a cold intensity that thrilled her with something like fear. "But that ain't sayin' what I will do f'om now awn."

"Bob! If you didn't—if I knew—"

"Evenin', Ma'am. You'all knows the way home."

He loosed the bridle and struck her horse on the rump with the flat of his hand and watched her go, and the thud of hoofbeats on the prairies fell like blows upon his heart. When no sound came back to him, the kid mounted Pecos, took Babe's bridle reins in his hand and rode away into the night.

The kid was pulling out, but he was taking his time about it and he was not leaving anything he owned behind him. With his gray hat set low over the utter misery in his eyes, he stood in the middle of the cabin at

"You killer," Nellie shouted at the Kid.

Cold Spring and his lowering glance moved slowly around the room, just to make sure that he had not missed any of his possessions. It was not a cheerful looking place. The glass from the one window lay in splintered fragments on the oilcloth table cover, and a few early flies buzzed in and out through the shattered panes, where rifle bullets had buzzed in yesterday. The log walls were scarred with the thin leaden hail that had beaten intermittently against the cabin.

The kid swung toward the bunk and looked at the pillow still nested to the shape of Babe's sleek black head. The muscles tightened along his jaw. Babe wouldn't have liked the look in the kid's eyes just then. Crazy as he had been from fever, Babe would have sensed the deadly quality in the kid's arrested glance, the tiger eye round and staring.

He got his own pillow and tucked it savagely under his arm. The nights [redacted] his head down beside Babe's in contented comradeship fairly slapped him in the face now with a bitter contempt for his blind faith.

And when he talks like you're the one that did the killing—when he talks like that right before Nellie, and makes her so crazy mad she starts in quirting you over the head and calling you a killer, just because she's only a girl and can't shoot you down like a dog, it's something worse than hate you feel toward him. Babe had brains sharper than any old he-wolf, but his brains sure weren't working last night, when he made that talk up there on the Bench.

Most men would have shot Babe right then and there. They wouldn't have cared a damn about his being drilled through the middle and plumb out of his head. But even with the welts of Nellie Murray's quirt on his cheek and the lash of her contempt searing his heart, the kid couldn't pull his gun and send a bullet into Babe Garner, wounded and sagging against the rope that held him tied on his horse. That would be putting himself down on a level with Babe, killing a man that hasn't any chance to shoot back. Had to go on and take Babe to the Poole ranch, same as if he were a friend.

The kid rolled himself a cigarette, lighted it with a match held steady in his fingers, picked up his rifle where it stood leaning against the cabin beside the door, slid it into the scabbard on his saddle and mounted. Where he was going, he did not know or care.

His hand went up suddenly to a livid welt across his cheek. He hadn't earned that cut of Nellie's quirt. His quirt, if you came right down to it. Braided in pride and high hopes down on the Brazos last winter, before Pap and Ben were shot. Never did think that quirt he had braided would be laid across his own cheek with all the strength there was in a girl's arm. Another half inch and it would have lost him that yellow tiger eye of his—and that, too, would have been something he hadn't earned.

"She nevah will call me a paid killah no moah," he told himself savagely. "She'll heah things about Tiger Eye Reeves that will shoah prove I'm death on killahs. Poole or nestah, it's all the same to me from now awn. She'll know—and she'll know why!"

She'd shiver too. He'd have her eating crow before the summer was over. She'd be ready to go down on her knees to him. He'd show her he wasn't called Tiger Eye for nothing. He'd shoah make that name mean something more than just the color of his eye. They'd remember that old welt slanting down across his cheek. One last glimpse he had of the low ridge and the line of cottonwoods down there in the valley, and then the rain blotted the place from his sight.

Before dark he camped in a thick grove of young spruces that grew beside a natural meadow. He slept, his quirt-scarred cheek cuddled in the crook of his arm—and dreamed of making love to Nellie Murray. Dreamed that she was going to marry him, and they planned the homestead they would take in Wolfe Buttes somewhere, and how they would build themselves a ranch with honeysuckle vines all over the cabin.

It was morning and it was raining with a cold, steady drip on the spruce boughs that sheltered him like a thatched roof.

Another day of hunting a den for the tiger that would be a scourge to all killers. The kid fished blindly under the blankets for his hat, found it and put it on as he sat up.

He crawled out of his blankets, buckling his gun belt around him with vicious tugs of the strap.

He stood up tall and full of pride in the man who wouldn't kill because he didn't want to kill. Didn't have to kill to make men afraid of him. They'd look over their shoulder when they spoke his name, and when any one mentioned the Brazos they'd look at each other, thinking that was where Tiger Eye came from.

All that day it rained in windy gusts, with periods of quiet drizzle between.

That afternoon he came upon the place he was hoping to find. A rock cabin built of fragments of the cliff it hugged close. Half the roof had fallen in. It was the upended ridge-pole with a corner of the roof attached and showing above the bushes that had caught the kid's attention when he looked that way. Except for that tell-tale fragment, the cabin was absolutely hidden in the thicket. When he looked beyond, he saw where there had been a corral and a stable, all built of rock cunningly piled for strength and concealment. There had to be a spring too, of course. He found it. Ice cold and crystal clear, in a niche of the cliff that was a part of the back wall of the cabin.

He also saw a rock-walled meadow swelling out like a great fat jug below its narrow neck of a pass not wide enough to let a hayrack through without scraping the wall on either side. The kid climbed upon a bowlder and for five minutes he gazed out over this lost paradise. Lost from the world, to be found by him when he needed it most.

It took the kid nearly a week to make the place habitable, though he worked furiously from sunrise until it was too dark to see what he was doing. It took him two days to find his way out of the intricate network of canyons to the open range beyond.

The kid drilled himself and his horses in the twisted canyons of Wolf Buttes, and let the sword of justice dangle awhile over the unsuspecting heads of the paid killers of the Poole. Let Nellie wonder awhile what had become of him, too. He reckoned it wouldn't hurt her to wonder and guess. Bound to guess plumb wrong, and he'd prove it to her, when he got good and ready.

ASPARAGUS BEETLES

My sparrow grass has beetles now.
I aim to deal with them—and how?
By Bob Adams

Professor C. R. Crosby of Cornell University tells how, and writes part of this homily for me as follows:

"In asparagus fields in which the crop is being cut, injury to the young shoots by the larvae of asparagus beetles may be prevented by cutting the crop clean every three to five days. In this way all the eggs deposited on the shoots will be removed before they hatch or very soon afterwards. All volunteer plants should be destroyed but it will often pay to leave a row here and there uncut to serve as a trap on which the beetles will congregate, feed and lay their eggs. Here they may be poisoned with calcium arsenate or lead arsenate. After the cutting season, plants may be protected from beetle injury by two or three applications of calcium-arsenate or lead-arsenate dust, 15 pounds mixed with 85 pounds of hydrated lime.

The use of poultry for the destruction of the beetle is practiced with good results in some localities."

Professor Crosby was writing especially for large scale growers but what he says applies to home gardens. The hoe handle homilist has practiced sneaking up on them, catching them, and bending their heads back until their dern necks break. Too mussy! Lately he knocks them by a quiet down stroke into a can of water coated with kerosene.

Poultrymen can save about ten cents on feed costs for each poor hen culled about June 15 instead of in October.
